Professional Services Marketing and Business Development: Thought Leadership and Pursuits

Ref: 939_21573 Date: 30 November – 4 December 2026 Location: London - Central London four-star Fees: 23000 SAR

Introduction:

Consulting, engineering, facilities management and advisory firms often rely on a few partners' personal networks for new work, so pipelines swing between feast and famine, proposals are written for tenders the firm cannot win and fees are cut to match rivals. Professional services marketing and business development replaces this with a planned approach: clear practice positioning, insight-led thought leadership, key client programmes, disciplined pursuit decisions and value-based fee models. This Core Concept course equips partners, directors and business development staff to run it. Participants produce a Practice Marketing and BD Plan for a case firm.

Course Objectives:

- Diagnose how target clients select and appoint expert advisers and where the firm's current work originates
- Define a practice positioning, differentiation and brand architecture that clients can recognise and recall
- Design a thought leadership, events and speaking programme tied to sector client problems
- Manage a weighted pursuit pipeline and apply go/no-go criteria before committing proposal effort
- Select fee models and cross-selling and referral routes that raise fee income per client
- Build and measure a Practice Marketing and BD Plan with performance indicators for a case firm

Target Audience:

- Partners and directors who own practice revenue and senior client relationships
- Business development managers who run pursuit pipelines and coordinate proposal teams
- Marketing managers who plan firm brand, insight content and events
- Practice and sector leads responsible for growing a service line
- Bid and proposal managers who coordinate multi-discipline submissions
- Client relationship managers who lead the firm's most important client accounts

Why Attend This Course:

- Leave with a Practice Marketing and BD Plan for a case consulting, engineering or facilities management firm
- Stop spending proposal effort on tenders the firm has little chance of winning
- Turn partners' expertise into insight content and speaking slots that bring clients to the firm
- Compare BD practice with peers from consulting, engineering, project management and advisory firms

Conclusion:

Professional firms grow steadily when expertise is positioned, made visible and turned into client work through a managed process rather than chance introductions. The course moves from how clients buy expertise and where the firm's work comes from, through positioning, practice branding, thought leadership and events, to key client plans, pursuit pipelines, go/no-go decisions and fee models, then cross-selling, referral networks, digital presence and BD measures. The final day applies these methods to a case firm and produces a Practice Marketing and BD Plan ready for partner review.
