Introduction:

Prosecution service management, covering case review, charging decisions and trial advocacy, is a 1-week course for prosecutors, prosecution office leaders and legal advisers to investigative agencies, ending with a Prosecution Case Strategy and Office Caseload Plan for a case file. Prosecution offices lose credibility when charges rest on weak evidence, exculpatory material surfaces late, advocates arrive at trial unprepared and ageing files pile up without oversight. Nominees already decide or supervise criminal files and work through case studies built on anonymised charge files, trial bundles and office caseload data. CoreConcept Training Center delivers this prosecution service management course.

Course Objectives:

- Apply the UN Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors to impartial, objective and independent decisions on criminal files
- Review a case file against the evidential stage and the public interest stage and record a reasoned charging decision
- Advise and direct investigators on evidence gaps, legality of evidence and alternatives to prosecution such as diversion
- Manage disclosure of material that undermines the prosecution case or affects witness credibility throughout the proceedings
- Prepare and present a prosecution case at trial, including opening statements, examination of witnesses and closing submissions
- Organise office caseloads, performance indicators and outgoing mutual legal assistance requests into a prosecution caseload plan

Target Audience:

- Prosecutors responsible for reviewing criminal files and taking charging decisions
 - Prosecution office leaders who allocate files, supervise prosecutors and report office performance
 - Legal advisers who guide investigative agencies on evidence and charge readiness

Why Attend This Course:

- Present a Prosecution Case Strategy and Office Caseload Plan for a case file to the chief prosecutor or head of the prosecution unit
- Decide whether a file meets the evidential and public interest stages, needs further investigation or suits diversion
- Avoid collapsed trials, late disclosure findings and ageing files that damage public confidence in the prosecution service
- Equip colleagues with the charging decision record, disclosure register and caseload dashboard used during the course

Conclusion:

Back at work, the participant hands the chief prosecutor or head of the prosecution unit a Prosecution Case Strategy and Office Caseload Plan covering the charging decision record, disclosure register, trial preparation notes and a workload allocation model. Office leaders use it to set charging review standards, rebalance files between prosecutors and agree advice routes with investigative agencies. After the first quarter, the unit should compare attrition, file age, disclosure issues raised at trial and cooperation request turnaround with the baseline and refine the plan.

Frequently Asked Questions FAQ:

What should participants know before a prosecution service management course?

Participants should already review, decide or supervise criminal files, or advise investigators on evidence. Bringing an anonymised charge file, a recent trial bundle or office caseload figures lets them apply the case studies directly to their own prosecution unit.

How does prosecution service management differ from a criminal investigation or court administration course?

It works from the prosecutor's desk: charging decisions, disclosure, trial advocacy and prosecution caseloads. Investigation courses train investigators to gather evidence and interview, and court administration courses manage court registries and hearing lists, which this course meets only where files pass between agencies.

Why does prosecution service management apply a two-stage charging test?

A two-stage test separates whether the evidence gives a realistic prospect of conviction from whether prosecution serves the public interest. Recording both stages makes decisions consistent, reviewable and defensible, and stops weak or unnecessary cases from reaching court.

What do participants take back from the prosecution service management course?

Participants take back a Prosecution Case Strategy and Office Caseload Plan for a case file, with a two-stage charging decision record, disclosure register, witness examination plan, caseload dashboard and mutual legal assistance request template ready to adapt.
