Ref: 2117_30682 Date: 14 – 18 December 2026 Location: Amsterdam - Zuidas business district hotel Fees: 23500 SAR

Introduction:

Convention bureau and business events work, from association congress bidding to subvention and incentive travel, is the subject of this 1-week course for convention bureau, venue sales and DMC units, ending with a Destination Business Events Bid and Ambassador Plan. Destinations lose rotating congresses and incentive groups when bids repeat brochure claims, subvention lacks a return test and no local hosts are recruited. Nominees already prospect or service meetings business and work through case studies on proposal requests, rotation histories and delegate spend data. CoreConcept Training Center delivers this convention bureau and business events course.

Course Objectives:

- Profile a destination's business events offer against rival destinations and set priorities across association, corporate, incentive and government meetings
- Identify and qualify rotating association congresses using meetings database searches, rotation histories and host selection criteria
- Prepare congress bid books, letters of support and site inspection itineraries that answer each association requirement
- Recruit and support local ambassadors from universities, hospitals and professional bodies to bring their congresses to the destination
- Design subvention and incentive offers and pitch incentive travel programmes to corporate buyers together with DMC partners
- Measure the economic impact and legacy of won business events and report them to destination funders

Target Audience:

- Convention bureau units that prospect, bid for and win association congresses for a city or nation

Why Attend This Course:

- Decide which congresses and incentive groups merit a bid, an inspection visit or a subvention offer
- Avoid spending subvention on events whose delegate spend and legacy cannot justify the support
- Equip colleagues with the qualification scorecard, bid book structure and economic impact worksheet used in class

Conclusion:

Back at work, the participant hands the bureau director and the destination funding board a Destination Business Events Bid and Ambassador Plan that ranks target congresses and incentive groups, sets bid and inspection actions, names ambassadors and caps subvention by expected return. Sales units use it to plan the bid calendar, venues and DMCs to prepare joint offers and funders to approve support budgets. After the first bid decision, the unit should compare win rate, subvention spent and measured delegate spend with the plan and adjust targets and ambassador recruitment.

Frequently Asked Questions FAQ:

What should participants know before a convention bureau and business events course?

Participants should already prospect, sell or service meetings business for a destination, venue or DMC. Bringing a recent request for proposal, a lost bid or delegate survey results lets them apply each case study to their own destination.

How does a convention bureau and business events course differ from an event management course?

It works from the destination side: finding rotating congresses, bidding, ambassadors, subvention and incentive pitching. An event management course plans and runs a single conference or exhibition, covering programme, suppliers and on-site operations, which this course treats only lightly.

Why do convention bureaus run ambassador programmes for business events?

Many associations choose a host destination only when a local member invites them. Ambassadors from universities, hospitals and professional bodies give a bid credibility, chair the local host committee and help the bureau find congresses it would not hear of through sales calls.

What do participants take back from a convention bureau and business events course?

Participants take back a Destination Business Events Bid and Ambassador Plan with a qualification scorecard, a bid book outline, a subvention return test and an economic impact worksheet, ready to adapt to their own bureau, venue or DMC.
